The general government has no right to interfere with commerce entirely within the state of New York York, any more than New York has a right to regulate commerce partly in New York and partly in any adjoining state; but the general government has a perfect right to regulate that commerce which the states cannot regulate." That seems to be sufficiently clear to dissipate all doubts as to the right of railroad companies to give dramatic troupes reduced rates within state bounds; and that it will be to their interest to exercise that right in the future is well attested by their eagerness to "make rates" to all traveling troupes at present and in the past.

Frederick Bryton is fortunate in having Fred McCloy for his manager. Mr. McCloy is a genial, whole-souled gentleman who knows his business, and who is completely wrapped up in the idea of achieving success for Mr. Bryton.
